Sample Question with Answer:

Education & Learning

Question:

Some people think that universities should provide graduates with the knowledge and skills needed in the workplace. Others think that the true function of a university should be to give access to knowledge for its own sake, regardless of whether the course is useful to an employer. Discuss both views and give your own opinion.

Model Answer (Band 8-9)

Introduction:

The role of universities in modern society has been a subject of ongoing debate. While some argue that higher education institutions should focus primarily on equipping students with practical skills for employment, others maintain that universities should prioritize the pursuit of knowledge for intellectual enrichment. This essay will examine both perspectives before presenting my own viewpoint.

Body Paragraph 1:

On the one hand, there are compelling reasons why universities should concentrate on workplace-oriented education. Firstly, students invest considerable time and money in their university education, and it is reasonable for them to expect a return on this investment in the form of enhanced employability. Furthermore, in today's competitive job market, graduates who possess industry-relevant skills are more likely to secure well-paid positions and contribute meaningfully to the economy. For instance, engineering and computer science programs that incorporate practical training and internships typically produce graduates who can immediately add value to their employers.

Body Paragraph 2:

On the other hand, proponents of knowledge-based education argue that universities have a broader mission beyond mere job preparation. They contend that higher education should develop critical thinking, creativity, and intellectual curiosity, which are valuable attributes regardless of one's career path. Moreover, studying subjects purely for intellectual enrichment can lead to unexpected innovations and breakthroughs that ultimately benefit society. History shows that many groundbreaking discoveries, such as the development of the internet, originated from theoretical research conducted without immediate practical applications in mind.

Conclusion:

In conclusion, while I acknowledge the importance of preparing students for the workforce, I believe universities should strike a balance between both approaches. An ideal university education should provide students with practical skills while also fostering intellectual growth and independent thinking. This combination ensures that graduates are not only employable but also capable of adapting to an ever-changing world and contributing to society in meaningful ways beyond their immediate professional roles.
